

THE LESTER AND SALLY ENTIN FACULTY OF HUMANITIES

The Tel Aviv University undergraduate program is a three year program, offering three study tracks: double-major (dm), single-major (sm) and expanded track studies, which combine two fields of study in a single department. Each department offers different options. Please check with each department to find out which study tracks are available.

To earn a double-major (dm) BA, students must successfully complete the course of study in two departments. Departments need not be from the same Faculty, but they must both offer a double-major track.

Some departments offer a single-major track from the second year of study. Students with outstanding scholastic achievements during their first year of double-major studies may enroll in this track. Please check with the individual departments regarding specific requirements for single-major studies.

The departments of Archeology and Ancient Eastern Cultures, History of the Middle East and Africa, Classical Studies, Literature, Hebrew Culture, and Arabic and Islam Studies offer expanded track studies, combining two fields of study in the same department, from the first year of studies.

See also School of Education

Admissions

- A minimum score of 450¹ on the psychometric exam.
- Matriculation certificate in compliance with University standards.

Some departments may have additional requirements, as specified below.

0631 Arabic and Islamic Studies

The Department of Arabic and Islamic studies offers students the opportunity to acquire theoretical and practical knowledge of classical and modern literary Arabic as well as Islamic religion, history and culture. Equipped with proficiency of the Arabic language, students explore the rich literary, cultural, and religious traditions of the Arab world.

¹ Candidates over 40 years of age and candidates with an Israeli matriculation average of 100 are exempt from the psychometric exam.

Fields of study

The department offers two fields of study:

- Arabic Language and Literature—acquaints students with the various historical periods in Arabic literature. Representative works from the main literary and religious genres are studied as they relate to the relevant historical-religious background.
- Islamic Studies—familiarizes students with the sacred sources of Islam, the Qur'an and the Hadith, in addition to important topics such as the biography of the Prophet Muhammad, the exegesis of the Qur'an, Islamic history, law, theology, and mysticism.

Students may elect to study the two fields in a single-major track, or combine either of the fields with studies in another department in a double-major track.

Admissions

Candidates seeking admission to the Arabic Language and Literature field are required to take an entrance exam to assess their reading comprehension of literary Arabic texts.

Placement exams:

Admission is contingent on the Lester and Sally Entin Faculty of Humanities criteria.

Non-native speakers seeking admission to both fields of study are required to take an entrance exam to assess their reading comprehension of literary Arabic texts.

The examinations will be held on:

Sunday, March 21, 2010 Gilman Building at 9:00

Sunday May 16, 2010 Gilman Building at 9:00

Tuesday August 17, 2010 Gilman Building at 9:00

Please check the bulletin board near room 150 in the Gilman Building on the morning of the exam for the room number.

Students with insufficient knowledge of Arabic will be required to complete a preparatory course in Arabic language, either during an intensive summer course, or during the first year of studies. Registration for summer courses, for which there is a separate fee, is through the department office.

Department internet site for additional details:
<http://www.tau.ac.il/humanities/arabic/>

0671 Archaeology and Ancient Near Eastern Cultures (dm/sm)

The Department of Archaeology and Ancient Near Eastern Cultures deals with the archaeology, history, languages, and religions of the ancient Near East from the Stone Age to the beginning of the Middle Ages. Undergraduate studies are designed to acquaint the student with the ancient civilizations of Israel, Syria, Egypt, Mesopotamia, Anatolia, the Aegean basin, and the Greek and Roman world. Special emphasis is placed on biblical archaeology.

Participation on field trips to archaeological sites, as well as in an archaeological excavation is mandatory.

Fields of study

The department offers two fields of study:

1. Archaeology of Israel and its surroundings
2. Ancient Near Eastern Cultures

Students may elect to study the two fields as a single-major program, or combine either of the tracks with studies in another department in a double-major program.

Admissions

Admission is contingent on the Lester and Sally Entin Faculty of Humanities criteria.

Department internet site for additional details
www.tau.ac.il/humanities/archaeology

0672 Classical Studies (dm/sm)

The Department of Classical Studies offers courses in Greek and Latin language and literature, philosophy, art, and archaeology. Students are encouraged to become acquainted with all aspects of classical culture, with emphasis on the encounter between the Greek and Jewish cultures in the Land of Israel.

Fields of study

Students may choose from three fields of study: Greek Language and Literature, Latin Language and Literature, and Classical Civilizations.

Greek Language and Literature

This field requires three years of Greek language studies and two years of Latin, as well as three introductory courses in general subjects. Students are required to complete two pro-seminars and two seminars in Greek poetry and prose, and one pro-seminar in Latin.

Latin Language and Literature

This field requires three years of Latin language studies and two years of Greek, as well as three introductory courses in general subjects. Students are required to complete two pro-seminars and two seminars in Latin poetry and prose, and one pro-seminar in Greek.

Classical Civilizations

Students in this field are required to complete eleven courses in Greek and Latin literature in translation, including poetry, drama, history, and philosophy, as well as courses in mythology, art, and archaeology. Students are also required to complete three pro-seminars and two seminars on topics related to the literature, history, and philosophy of the Greco-Roman world.

Students may elect to study two fields as a single-major program, or to combine one field in the department with studies in another department in a double-major program.

Admissions

Admission is contingent on the Lester and Sally Entin Faculty of Humanities criteria.

Department internet site for additional details
www.tau.ac.il/humanities/classics/

0687 East Asian Studies

The Department of East Asian Studies offers students the opportunity to extensively study Asian cultures, focusing on India, China, and Japan. The interdisciplinary approach studies the cultural elements of these Asian civilizations from the perspectives of history, religion, philosophy, anthropology, sociology, literature, the arts, and language. The department aims to provide students with the basic academic tools for further research, focusing on the unique viewpoints of Asian cultures.

The department also offers students the opportunity to acquire basic skills in the major languages of Asia: Sanskrit, Hindi, Chinese (classic and modern), and Japanese (classic and modern). Both reading and oral skills are promoted in the modern languages.

Study Tracks

— Double-major track: Based on a combined program from the East Asia Department and another department.

— Single-major track: Second year students may enroll in a single-major track, based on academic excellence. To enter the single-major track students must complete their first year of studies with a minimum average of 90 in their first year courses in the department and with a minimum average of 85 in 16 hours of course-work in their other studies.

Students wishing to transfer to the single-major track after their first year should submit a written request to the department Teaching Committee.

Admissions

Admission is contingent on the Lester and Sally Entin Faculty of Humanities criteria.

Candidates with partial academic credits must have a minimum grade point average of 80 from a recognized institution of higher education, calculated on the basis of all studies (comprised of at least 30 semester hours).

Department internet site for additional details www.tau.ac.il/humanities/eastasia/

0626 English¹ (dm/sm)

The program is designed to provide students with a scholarly knowledge of English and American culture, and to train students in the critical use of scholarly methods of literary study, to accustom students to the independent study of cultural texts, and to assist them in developing their ability to use the English language as an instrument for oral and written expression.

¹ Applicants may be required to take an entrance exam, given by the department, in addition to the Psychometric Entrance Examination. (See the Examination Schedule).

Fields of study

The department offers two fields of study:

- English Studies—includes courses in English literature to 1800, English and American literature from 1800, and theoretical areas in literary study (e.g., history and theory of criticism, thematic and generic subjects, etc.)
- American Studies—provides students with a broad understanding of American society and culture. Based on courses in the English department, the field combines studies in other disciplines, including history, film, political science, and media studies.

Admissions

- A minimum grade of 85 in the 5-unit Israeli Matriculation English exam and either exemption ("Ptor") in the English section of the psychometric exam (or "AMIR") or "Ptor" achieved in the courses given by the Division of Foreign Languages.
- A grade of 90 in English as a first foreign language (in the old system of Israeli Matriculation) and a "Ptor" as mentioned above.

Candidates who do not meet these requirements may choose to take the English Department entrance exam, if they have one of the following;

- Level of "Advanced" in the English Placement section of the psychometric Exam (or "AMIR"), or in a course given by the Division of Foreign Languages.
- A grade of 600 or more on the verbal section of the SATs.
- A high school diploma from a country where the primary language of instruction is English. The entrance examinations will be held on:

Friday May 28, 2010 Gilman Building at 9:00

Friday July 23, 2010 Gilman Building at 9:00

Friday September 3, 2010 Gilman Building at 9:00

Please check the bulletin board near room 150 in the Gilman Building on the morning of the exam for the room number.

Candidates who passed the entrance exam but whose level of English does not meet the academic requirements of the Department will be required to take a remedial composition (4 hrs) course. Only those students who pass with a minimum grade of 70 will be allowed to continue their studies in the Department. These candidates are advised to take this course in the first semester of their studies.

Department internet site for additional details www.tau.ac.il/humanities/english

0625 French (dm/sm)

The French Department acquaints students with one of the principal cultures of Western Europe, and aids students in acquiring French language skills. Students study French Culture, Literature, and Linguistics in a modular bilingual program (Hebrew and French). A total of 60 semester hours is required to complete the program.

Study tracks

The French department offers two double-major study tracks. Track A is for students with no prior knowledge of French. Students in this track will choose department classes taught in Hebrew, while acquiring French language skills. Students are required to successfully complete four semesters (8 yearly hours in the French Department and 8 yearly hours in the Division of Foreign Languages) of French language studies as part of the general department requirements.

Students with prior knowledge of French (Track B) will participate in classes in both Hebrew and French. Students wishing to enroll in this track are required to take a French proficiency test. Proficiency tests will be held on June 23, 2010 and August 9, 2010 at 9:00 in the Gilman Building. Dictionaries are allowed. Please contact the French Department secretary (03-6409786) for the exact location a week before the exam. Students with French or other francophone matriculation certificates are exempt from the proficiency exam.

Admissions

Admission is contingent on the Lester and Sally Entin Faculty of Humanities criteria.

Department internet site for additional details www.tau.ac.il/humanities/french

0662 General and Interdisciplinary Studies (dm)¹

This multidisciplinary undergraduate program offers students the opportunity to earn a double-major BA degree based on a broad range of course clusters offered by the Faculty of Humanities and other faculties. East Asian Studies, Women and Gender Studies, Ibero-Latin American Studies, Social Justice, Psychology and Psychoanalysis, Jerusalem Studies, Environment and Ecology, Child Culture, and Rhetoric are some of the clusters in this curriculum.

Students in the General and Interdisciplinary Studies program are afforded the opportunity to plan an individual curriculum of studies.

Study tracks

This double-major study program is to be combined with another (non-inter-disciplinary) double-major program, for a total of 58 semester hours.

Admissions

Admission is contingent on the Lester and Sally Entin Faculty of Humanities criteria. In addition, candidates will be required to pass an exam in English-Hebrew translation, and to be interviewed by the head of the program.

Department internet site for additional details www.tau.ac.il/humanities/general-studies

0691 Geography and Human Environment (dm/sm)

Studies are designed to provide the student with basic knowledge of the various aspects of social and physical geography and the complexity of the relationship between man and his environment.

Courses include introductory and methodology courses, advanced courses in specialized fields, seminar courses, field courses, and general elective courses.

¹ The following departments may not be combined in a double-major program: General and Interdisciplinary Studies (0662), Women's and Gender Studies Program (0608), The Multidisciplinary Program in the Arts (0861), Communication (1085), General Sciences in the Faculty of Exact Sciences (0311), Management (1221), or Accounting (1211).

Study tracks

The department offers both a double-major track and a single-major track.

- Double-major Track (58 hours): Based on a combined program from the Geography Department and another department.
- Single-major Track (100 hours + 16 hours of a minor): Second year students may enroll in a single-major track based on academic excellence. Students who have completed their first year with a minimum average of 80 in both departments of study are eligible to enroll in a single-major program.

Students wishing to transfer to the single-major track after their first year should submit a written request to the department Teaching Committee.

Admissions

Admission is contingent on the Lester and Sally Entin Faculty of Humanities criteria.

Department internet site for additional details www.tau.ac.il/humanities/geography/

0690 Hebrew Culture Studies (dm/sm)

The department of Hebrew Culture Studies offers a unique undergraduate program for specialized study and research in the fields of Hebrew and Jewish culture, from the ancient to the modern period. Students may choose to specialize in one or two of the six fields of study offered by the department, which include: (1) Hebrew language; (2) Semitic Linguistics; (3) Bible; (4) Talmud and Ancient Jewish Literature; (5) Kabbalah and Hasidism; and (6) Jewish Philosophy. The first year of studies in the program is common to all students and provides basic academic tools and an overall interdisciplinary introduction to Hebrew and Jewish studies. The department also offers a track in (7) Interdisciplinary Studies, aimed at the integrative study of Jewish, Hebrew and Israeli culture from different approaches. Graduates of this program will be awarded a degree in Jewish Philosophy.

Fields of study

1) Hebrew Language: The undergraduate program is designed to provide students with scholarly knowledge of the structure of the Hebrew language as it is manifested in various historical periods and styles, and to introduce them to the problems and achievements of the Hebrew language and general linguistic research. Studies are oriented toward granting students an awareness of modern linguistic research methods in phonology, morphology, syntax, semantics, and pragmatics. Studies are based on a comparative method that combines the study of cognate Semitic languages with the study of the development of the Hebrew language. Emphasis is placed on the processes in Modern Hebrew from its unique revival in the 20th century, and variations in spoken and written Modern Hebrew.

Students are advised to study one of the following as their second major: Bible Studies, Talmud or Jewish Philosophy (Department of Hebrew Culture Studies), Hebrew Literature (Department of Literature), Jewish History, Archeology and Ancient Near Eastern Cultures, Arabic, Linguistics, or General Studies in the Humanities.

2) Semitic Linguistics: The program provides students with both a basic knowledge of living and ancient languages, and an awareness of general research methodologies. The program aims to train students in the research of Semitic languages using modern linguistic tools of both synchronic and historical linguistics.

3) Bible: The program provides students with a broad basis in the field of biblical studies, covering various modern and post-modern approaches to biblical literature, and introducing students to critical methodology in the study of the Bible. The program aims to develop students' ability to study the Bible analytically and to understand the Bible within the context of the ancient Near-Eastern world.

4) Talmud and Ancient Jewish Literature: The program focuses on the classics of Jewish Law and Jewish Thought in the formative periods of the Mishna and the Talmud. The program offers two fields of study (one emphasizing Talmud, the other emphasizing Second Temple thought) to accommodate the different interests of students studying this period in Jewish history and literature. The program aims to provide the skills required for independent and critical study of the classical sources of Talmudic literature, both legal and aggadic material, as well as the compositions of the

Gaonic and Rabbinic periods. (Special areas of advanced studies include Geniza research.)

5) Kabbalah and Hasidism: The program covers the study of early Jewish Mysticism before 1200 CE, the rise and development of the medieval Kabbalah, the Book of Zohar, the Kabbalah of Safed and its influence on Judaism, the emergence of Sabbateanism, and Hasidism and its main ideas. Students are introduced to central topics in Kabbalah literature, such as Kabbalistic theosophy, the mystical-theurgical significance of the Torah and the commandments, the problem of evil, and the soul and its transmigration.

6) Jewish Philosophy: The program exposes students to Jewish thought and history, offering a historical and thematic approach to the beliefs and ideas of Judaism from the post-biblical period through the modern era. Students are trained in reading and analyzing major texts in Jewish thought, so as to enhance their understanding of the development of Jewish thought and the struggle for Jewish identity throughout the ages. The curriculum is divided into three sections: Jewish thought in the formative period of the Mishnah and the Talmud; Medieval Jewish Philosophy (9th-16th centuries); and Modern Jewish Thought (17th-21st centuries).

7) Interdisciplinary Studies in Hebrew and Jewish Culture: This new study track has been developed to enable students to continue their interdisciplinary studies in Hebrew and Jewish culture as part of an undergraduate program which includes three study clusters: disciplinary (in one of the six tracks mentioned above); thematic (offering a cross-section of courses on a specific theme in Hebrew and Jewish culture); and general (from outside the department, including the Faculties of Humanities, Arts, Law, or Social Studies). For further details please consult the department.

Admissions

Admission to all fields of study is contingent on the Lester and Sally Entin Faculty of Humanities criteria.

Department internet site for additional details:
www.tau.ac.il/humanities/hebrew_culture/index.heb.html

0621 History (dm/sm)

The Department of General History focuses on the history of Western Civilization. Courses are divided into four principal clusters: ancient history; medieval history; early-modern history; and contemporary history. The contemporary history cluster is divided into four geographical subdivisions (Western and Central Europe, Russia and Eastern Europe, North America, and Latin America).

Study tracks

Students may convert their double-major history studies to a single-major track at the end of the first year after achieving a minimum grade average of 85.

Admissions

Admission is contingent on the Lester and Sally Entin Faculty of Humanities criteria.

Department internet site for additional details.
www.tau.ac.il/humanities/history/

0677 Jewish History (dm/sm)

The Department of Jewish History offers a wide range of courses in the history of the Jewish people in the Land of Israel and in the Diaspora.

Courses begin from the biblical era, when the distinctive culture of the nation of Israel began to take shape in the ancient Near East. Studies continue to the period of the Second Temple and Talmud and to the Middle Ages, when the prominence of the Jewish national center in the Land of Israel first rose and then declined, while new, influential centers of Jewish life grew in the Diaspora. Courses continue to scan the history of the Jews in the Land of Israel under frequently changing rulers, while Diaspora Jews reached all corners of the known world, molding the historical image of the Jewish people until modern times.

The department provides students with the critical tools and the intellectual perspective necessary to understand events and historical processes, ideological movements and spiritual achievements that have characterized Jewish life from its formation to the present day.

Study tracks

Undergraduate students are offered two programs:

- Double-major Track: Based on a combined program from the Jewish History Department and another department.

- Single-major Track: Second year students who have completed their first year of studies with an average grade of 85 in the Department of Jewish History and an average grade of 80 in their other department of study may enroll in a single-major program. Students wishing to transfer to the single-major track after their first year should submit a written request to the department Teaching Committee.

Admissions

Admission is contingent on the Lester and Sally Entin Faculty of Humanities criteria.

Department internet site for additional details www.tau.ac.il/humanities/jewish_history/about_us.eng.html

0627 Linguistics (dm/sm)

The Linguistics Department undergraduate program focuses on theories of natural language (human languages), specifically on theories that provide explanatory accounts for human knowledge of language as manifested in a wide variety of linguistic phenomena. The fundamental assumption is that natural languages are governed by universal principles.

The study of linguistics promotes analytical thinking and problem solving, allowing students to pursue diverse career tracks. The department trains students for an academic career in linguistics and provides crucial knowledge for students intending to specialize in professions related to language, such as artificial intelligence, communication, clinical aspects of language (language and communication disorders), language teaching, literature, translation, etc.

Study tracks

The Linguistics Department offers two study tracks.

- Double-major track: Based on a combined program from the Linguistics Department and another department.
- Single-major track: Second year students may enroll in a single-major track based on academic excellence. Students must complete their first year with (a) a minimum average of 85 in 3 out of the 4 courses: Introduction to Linguistics, Introduction to Semantics, Phonology for Beginners, Foundation of Theoretical Linguistics, and (b) with a minimum average of 80 in 16-20 hours of coursework (depending on the specific department) in their other department to convert their studies to a single-major track. Students wishing to transfer to the single-major track after their first year should submit a written request to the department Teaching Committee.

Admissions

Admission is contingent on the Lester and Sally Entin Faculty of Humanities criteria.

The professional literature is written in English. Some of the courses (including required courses) are also taught in English.

Department internet site for additional details www.tau.ac.il/humanities/linguistics/about_us.heb.html

0680 Literature Department (dm/sm)

Poetics (Theory of Literature), Hebrew Literature, Comparative Literature, Creative Writing, Translation, and Editing

The newly established Literature Department unites the former Departments of Hebrew Literature, and Poetics and Comparative Literature.

The various fields of study tracks offered provide a comprehensive selection of courses in literary theories; approaches to literary critical methods; Hebrew literature and culture throughout history, focusing on the modern period, particularly contemporary Israeli literature; and major trends, genres and exemplary works of world literature. Students develop interpretative, analytical, and critical skills regarding literary texts. The writing fields develop creative writing skills, and literary editing and translating proficiency

Fields of study

The curriculum of the Literature Department includes (1) core courses, required for all tracks; and (2) an elected field of study.

Core courses for all fields include: Introduction to Narrative; Introduction to Poetry; Introduction to Literary Theory; Introduction to Modern Hebrew Literature; Prosody; and Canonical Novels.

The tracks offered are:

1. Hebrew Literature & Israeli Culture
2. Poetics & Comparative Literature

3. Combined program (of the two above)
4. Professional Literary Writing – one of three clusters:
 - a. Creative Writing
 - b. Literary Editing & Criticism
 - c. Literary Translation

Candidates whose high school education was not in Hebrew must attain exemption level on the Hebrew Proficiency exam before beginning their studies.

Admissions

Admission is contingent on the Lester and Sally Entin Faculty of Humanities criteria.

Department internet site for additional details www.tau.ac.il/humanities/literature/index.heb.html

0608 The NCJW Women and Gender Studies Program

BA Program that combines gender studies from the Faculties of Humanities, Law, Social Sciences, and Arts

The program lays the foundation for a critical feminist examination of the social and cultural gendered arrangements. Feminist and gender theories and research are based on the understanding that “feminine” and “masculine,” as these concepts are understood and presented in society, are not a necessary consequence of biological essential structures and differences, but rather the consequence of changing social, political, and cultural structures and ideological needs. The Women and Gender Studies Program aims to give students theoretical and methodological tools for scientific, critical and creative thinking in a variety of fields of study: history, sociology, art history, politics, literature, psychology, law, geography and planning, film, etc. It offers an analysis of the role of gender as a critical category and the place of women in culture and society. From this standpoint, the focus is on the links between gender, class, race, ethnicity, sexuality, nationalism, and globalization. The curriculum introduces students to a broad basis of feminist theories, both in their own right and as they affect related fields of study.

Fields of study

This program is offered only as a double major. See comment.¹

Students participate in mandatory core courses and choose from four study tracks: Humanities, Social Science, Art, and Law. A wide choice of elective courses are offered from associated departments: History and Jewish History, Art History, Sociology & Anthropology, Geography and Human Environment, Philosophy, Cultural Studies, Law, Social Work, Literature, Cinema and Television Studies, Theater, French Studies, English and American Studies and others.

Admissions

Please contact the department regarding admission requirements.

Scholarships

The National Council of Jewish Women (USA) endows this program and offers several tuition scholarships. These will be awarded solely on the basis of financial need. Conditions for submitting applications for scholarships can be viewed in the faculty information brochure and on the Program's website.

The detailed curriculum, together with additional information, appears on the website of The NCJW Women and Gender Studies Program.

www.tau.ac.il/humanities/ncjw

0622 Middle Eastern and African History (dm/sm)

The Department of Middle Eastern and African History offers a variety of courses dealing with the history of the Middle East from the advent of Islam. Special emphasis is placed on the modern history of the Middle East and Africa. The program aims to acquaint students with the cultures, socio-political structures, and languages of these regions. The department offers three fields of study: The Modern Middle East, The Middle East as a Bridge between Continents, and The History of the Arab World and Islam.

1 The following departments are not to be selected as a double-major combination among themselves: General and Interdisciplinary Studies (0662), Women and Gender Studies Program (0608), The Multidisciplinary Program in the Arts (0861), Management (1221), or Accounting (1211).

Study tracks

The department offers two study tracks:

—Double major BA: The student earns one major from the Department of Middle Eastern and African History and one major from another department of the student's choice.

—Single major BA: For first year students, a minimum of 580 in the factored scores on the psychometric and matriculation exams is required, and for second year students, a minimum average grade of 90 is required in the Department of Middle Eastern and African History as well as in the student's other department or school.

All second year students are eligible to enroll in the high school history teachers training program. Various scholarships are offered to the department's students

Admissions

Admission is contingent on the Lester and Sally Entin Faculty of Humanities criteria.

Department internet site for additional details www.mideast.tau.ac.il/index.html

0618 Philosophy (dm/sm)

The Philosophy Department introduces students to basic concepts, methodologies, and fields of study in philosophy.

Study tracks

- Double-major Program (56 hours): Based on a combined program from the Philosophy Department and another department.
- Single-major Program (112 hours): Second year students who have completed their first year with an average grade of 90 in the Philosophy Department and an average grade of 85 in their other department may enroll in a single-major program. Students wishing to transfer to the single-major track after their first year should submit a written request to the department Teaching Committee.

The curriculum is composed of three sections.

Section A: Introductory Courses (required):

- Introduction to Modern Philosophy
- Introduction to Greek Philosophy
- Introduction to 19th-20th century Philosophy

- Introduction to Logic
- Readings in Philosophical Texts

Section B: Introductory and advanced courses in the following areas:

- Philosophy of Science and Digital Culture
- Epistemology and Metaphysics
- Philosophy of Language and Logic
- Philosophy of Religion
- Eastern Philosophy
- Ethics and Political Philosophy
- Aesthetics

Section C: General elective courses in various fields of study

Admissions

Admission is contingent on the Lester and Sally Entin Faculty of Humanities criteria.

Department internet site for additional details
www.tau.ac.il/humanities/philosophy/index-heb.htm