

Note: The down-pointing arrow indicates that the real interest rate is driven down by the central bank, which lowers the nominal interest rate at a pace faster than the rate of decline in inflation. The assumption is that the inflation rate reaches zero when the arrow touches the horizontal coordinate, at the point where the nominal interest rate is set at its zero lower bound.

